Values and Social Policy Track

The Values and Social Policy Track is a topically oriented major within the Department of Philosophy that draws on courses in a variety of departments and disciplines. This major was developed in order to prepare students for policy-oriented positions, whether in business, government, or academia. Such positions typically require some expertise in the social sciences as well as expertise in the study of values.

This topical major provides students with a firm foundation in philosophy as well as solid training in allied disciplines. Students interested in this major are urged to meet with the Faculty Advisor as early as possible in their academic careers. The student and the Advisor will develop a program together that is especially suited to the interests and career goals of the student.

Law and Society Track

The object of the Law and Society Track is to provide a framework within which students interested in law may gain a broader understanding of that subject. While this program may be of special value to pre-law students, a firm grounding in the law and its relationship to morality and social science is a strong foundation for work in both the public interest and private sectors. The requirements of the program are 33 hours in philosophy (21 of which must be upper division) and 12 hours in allied disciplines. The 12 hours may be taken in a variety of departments, such as, for example, political science, history, sociology, and economics. The 33 hours in philosophy must include all the courses listed in Group I. Group II lists additional courses that are recommended but not required.
